Dear Clerk,

I am writing to express my opinion regarding the proposed court rule to require judges to provide a doctor's excuse who miss work for more than 12 weeks for medical reasons.

Missing work for any more than a reasonable time frame of two weeks should require a judge to provide a doctor's excuse.

Two weeks would be more than the length of time required in most other positions of employment. Why require less of judges?

If the proposed time frame of 12 weeks is implemented, the judge should have to submit to an independent medical examination at that juncture.

Judges are always complaining they're overburdened due to overloaded dockets.

Why wait 12 weeks to learn a judge is malingering when other judges have to substitute in their stead?

Strict disciplinary actions should be imposed and written into the new court rule if it's learned a judge has been malingering.

Sincerely,

J. Molnar
